

Suzanne Ehly (she/her) serves as a chaplain/spiritual director for Still Harbor. In addition, she is a professional musician, an equity and justice consultant with VISIONS, Inc., an experienced educator, workshop and retreat leader, and former Artist-in-Residence and Faculty in Voice, Body, Culture and Leadership at Episcopal Divinity School, Cambridge, MA and faculty at UMASS/Boston. As a white, Protestant, queer, US woman, she considers it both her keen delight and citizen responsibility to engage in the ongoing transformation of herself and of individuals and organizations with which she work. She brings curiosity, compassion, and patience to her expertise in understanding and transforming/healing the intersected and hybrid ways that racism and other oppressions live in the bodies and imaginations of people from both traditionally “included” and “excluded” groups.

Mary Jo Sullivan

Mary Jo Sullivan is Clinical Director for a large behavioral health agency in central Oklahoma. Mary Jo has over 40 years of successful experience in program development, staff development, and strategic planning. Her background in the treatment of family systems and co-dependency is foundational in her belief that personal reflection and accountability are necessary elements of successful collaboration. Mary Jo enjoys a good Netflix binge (most recently, “Call the Midwife”) but also enjoys quite weekends with friends.
